GEICO presents

Bucky Covington

Thursday, August 27th, 2009 @ 5:30 p.m.

Bucky Covington adds a new twist to the notion that winning is everything. The 8th place finalist on the 5th season of the runaway hit TV show American Idol, Covington has now parlayed that into a burgeoning country music singing career—and that was exactly what he set out to do.

He's a genuine good ole Southern boy, with oodles of down-home charm, that grew up in the heart of NASCAR country, racing dirt bikes and four-wheelers and loving country music. After he graduated from high school, he bought his first guitar and taught himself how to play (he also plays bass and drums). He was inspired to do so after hearing an album by the Jeff Healey Band, who he'd seen in the movie Roadhouse.

After competing on American Idol, calls from people in the music business started pouring in. It was the first call that he received from Ron Harris, of D-Seven Artist Management who manages Sawyer Brown, that really made things click for Covington. Ron put Bucky in touch with Mark Miller, and a conversation with Mark drove things home.

After completing the American Idol tour, Covington signed with D-Seven Artist Management and started working with Miller on making his first album. Then, fortune smiled on him again when he was invited at the last minute to join the GAC Country Music Christmas Tour.

It's obvious that Covington's considerable talent as a singer combined with his winning personality and presence are prime factors in his rapid rise. He also believes that both luck and some spiritual grace had an influence as well. Add some pluck to the formula, and it's no surprise that Covington is on his way to winning the big race of having a lifetime singing career.
